LOT 1145

A Chinese four-fold 'coromandel' screen, Kangxi period, one side finely lacquered, carved and coloured with a central rectangular panel crossing over all four folds, filled with scholars or immortals enjoying the islands, bridges and pathways of a pleasure garden, including Shoulao on buffalo and a dragon amidst clouds, within a keyfret frame, the border filled with 'Hundred Antique' motifs, within an outer border of shou characters and stylized dragons, the reverse undecorated, height 262cm, total length 299cm (some faults and probably reduced from a six-fold screen).

Estimate: £400 - £600

Condition Report

1145. Overall the four panels are in generally good order commensurate with their age. Typical minor losses and some splitting to lacquer. The two outer panels have had the borders of the central panel altered, reworked and painted to match up with the two inner panels. We think the panel was a 6-fold screen and the outer two panels have been adapted to match up and create a 4-fold screen.
