LOT 1268

A Chinese eight-fold 'coromandel' lacquered screen, probably late Kangxi period, one side finely carved and coloured with a central rectangular panel crossing over all eight folds, filled with a scene of figures at leisure in a rocky landscape with lotus pond, pavilions, trees and cranes, within a keyfret frame and border of birds and flowers, all against an incised fretwork iron red/brown ground, the reverse with a scene of the Boys' Festival with figures in and out of doors, pavilions, lotus pond, rocks and trees within a keyfret frame, the border filled with 'Hundred Antiques' motifs, one incorporating a four character mark, height 211.5cm, total length 336cm (some faults and repairs).

Estimate: £2,500 - £3,500

Condition Report

1268. The screen is in fairly typical condition, commensurate with its age. The damage includes vertical splits to panels and some chipping and losses to edges of all panels. There has been restoration and overpainting to these areas. Three of the panels have applied metal support brackets at the tops and bottoms. It is still a good decorative screen.
