Condition Report

637. Naval crown brooch 14ct - amateur repair to central shield with residual glue evident, a couple of chips to the half shields on either side, bar at the back of the brooch is slightly loose.

Second naval crown brooch - tiny nicks to edge of white enamel and to the red/green enamel, both really only noticeable under magnification. The bar fitting is working well.

Flag brooch - there is the odd old nick to the edge of the red enamel and a few surface chips to the top left corner edge of the enamel. The bar to the back is bent but following the bend of the flag, so I think this is intentional and it clips nicely into place under the hook. The hook has potentially been replaced or re-attached in the past.

The three brooches overall have some light surface wear/scratching, which is largely only noticeable under magnification.
